Hiring Team, Veeva Systems

Your posting for the Product Marketing Manager / Senior Manager role centers on one loop: messaging and assets that carry from demand generation through field enablement to customer marketing. I have run that full loop before. At Sensata I owned the GTM for a new sensing product line end to end, positioning, pricing, channel and launch, then built the email and paid demand-gen campaigns behind it that lifted qualified leads 35% and drove $2M+ in first-year revenue with a network of OEM and distributor accounts.

Field enablement is the part of that loop that most easily falls apart between teams, so I built the sales enablement decks and case studies for 50+ Sensata reps myself, and win rates went up 30% once the field had one consistent story instead of five different decks. On the customer-marketing side, I kept enterprise case studies and sales materials current at Pixis, feeding customer voice back into positioning and helping lift sales team performance 20%. Selling into life sciences means selling into a technical, process-heavy buyer, and that is the audience I have spent my career translating for: OEMs, distributors and industrial accounts who need to see the operational upside before they care about the feature.

I am also building PriceKeel, a decision-integrity layer for B2B SaaS deal pricing that gives RevOps and Finance an explainable, auditable reason to trust a discount instead of just hoping it holds up. That same instinct, give a technical buyer language and evidence they can stand behind, is what I would bring to an audience that lives by documentation and process. At Applied Materials today I automate the repetitive side of market and competitive analysis with AI agents built on Claude, which frees up more of the week for the messaging and enablement work that actually needs a human.

What I would bring to this role is a messaging-to-field-to-customer motion that has already shipped a launch to a real revenue number, plus the discipline to keep it consistent as new pricing, personas and competitive threats show up. Proof trail at adhi-product.vercel.app/ref/veeva-systems.
