Hiring Team, Dr. Reddy's Laboratories

Your posting draws a hard line between strategic leadership and a PMO role, and the clearest proof I already hold that line is the FY2026 Bleeders and Leakers dashboard I built at Sensata: I scored 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions and 20 product lines, then turned $433M of scattered margin information into one value-pool view senior leadership could act on the same week, not a thicker report to file away. I recovered $700K+ of that in two quarters by negotiating the outcome directly with distributors, raising channel margins from 53% to 61%.

Future operating models and new value pools are not new territory either. At PriceKeel I am building the operating model myself: I run the CRM and CPQ, the forecast and pipeline reviews, and every deal approval end to end, and I designed the guardrail engine and audit trail that give Finance and Sales leadership one explainable system for every pricing call instead of three disconnected ones. Standing up a single system of record across functions is the same muscle this seat is asking for, just compressed to one founder instead of an enterprise spanning R&D, Manufacturing, Quality, Commercial and Supply Chain.

The cross-functional alignment piece is where I think I can move fastest for you. At Applied Materials I turn scattered input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market-sizing view every quarter, and I own the OKR cadence and leadership decks behind the weekly and quarterly business reviews that advise senior leadership on where to move next. I automate the repetitive half of that work with AI agents built on Claude, which is the build-the-tool-yourself habit a Digital, Data and AI transformation office is asking its own leadership team to bring, not a capability to outsource to a vendor.

I would like to talk about what the Chief Digital and Information Officer's first-quarter agenda looks like and where a Chief of Staff can take a function-by-function problem off that list before it becomes three meetings instead of one.
