Hiring Team, Candid Health

When Sensata needed a go-to-market for a sensing product line that did not exist yet, I built it from the ground up: positioning, pricing, channel and launch, with no existing team or playbook to inherit. That line closed its first year at $2M plus in revenue. I am also founding PriceKeel right now, building its go-to-market, pricing and CRM from zero. Your posting asks for someone who builds the product marketing function from scratch rather than tunes one already running, and that is the specific pattern I keep repeating, not a stretch from adjacent work.

The launch mechanics in your posting map directly onto what I already run. At Sensata I developed the launch plan and ran the integrated email and paid campaigns behind it, generating 35% more qualified leads, while coordinating the feature backlog (100+ items, 3 regions, Agile) so releases shipped 25% faster. The positioning frameworks underneath those launches turned technical sensor specs into customer-value language, lifting conversion 15%, the same translation a revenue-cycle platform needs when the buyer is a finance or operations leader rather than an engineer.

The case-study half of your posting is where I would start fastest. I ran 30+ structured interviews with OEMs and distributors before writing any messaging, then converted those conversations into customer references and case studies that fed both sales and the product roadmap, raising CSAT 22%. The sales enablement built off that same research reached 50+ reps and moved win rates 30%. That research-to-case-study loop, plus a graduate project that built buyer personas across four verticals including healthcare, is the closest honest parallel I have to translating a healthtech RCM platform's value into language an enterprise buyer trusts.

I am also running Strategic Marketing III at Applied Materials right now, where I automate the repetitive side of market research with AI agents built on Claude, the kind of workflow discipline a company investing in GenAI for its own platform would expect from its product marketing hire.
