Hiring Team, Airwallex

At Plug Power I owned $100K/month in paid social and paid search budgets across multiple business units, on LinkedIn and Meta as well as Google and Microsoft Ads. The part that actually moved CPA down 25% was not the bidding, it was automating the Salesforce, Adobe Analytics and Google Tag Manager stack so every dollar tied back to MQL quality and stage 1 pipeline instead of raw clicks. That is the same job your posting describes: connecting audience data, ad systems and CRM workflows into one growth engine, not running LinkedIn and Meta as separate line items.

I have run both sides of that engine. On the demand side, I built KPI frameworks in SQL and GA4 across 50K+ connected devices at Sensata to find the cohorts worth targeting before spending against them, and at Pixis I managed an 8-person team across 8 client accounts, using Amplitude and Tableau to build the audience segments that lifted ROAS 40% and cut churn 50%. On the CRM side, I have owned lead scoring and MQL/SQL handoff against Salesforce, and I automated a Pardot lead flow end to end that cut cost per lead in half. That is the audience-enrichment-to-CRM loop this role needs someone to own, not two separate skill sets stitched together for an interview.

I also test in public rather than guessing. At Plug Power I ran 15+ A/B tests across 50+ inbound campaigns and closed the keyword-strategy gaps they surfaced; at Pixis I restructured a fashion brand's full funnel, feed cleanup through lookalike expansion, for 3x ROAS in a single month. I automate the reporting side of that work with Claude AI agents at Applied Materials today, so I show up already comfortable letting a tool handle the repetitive query work while I focus on what the audience data is actually telling me.

What I would bring to Airwallex is a manager who has already run the pacing, bid strategy and CRM plumbing this role needs at $100K/month scale, and who ties every campaign decision back to pipeline, not vanity metrics. Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/airwallex.
