Hiring Team, ResultFlow

Right now I run the operating stack for my own company end to end: CRM, CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, deal approvals, and a fundraising process, all with no handed-down playbook to follow. That is the exact shape of what you are asking a Chief of Staff to do: structure the priorities, run the cadence, and chase every action item until it actually closes. I am not describing a past job when I say that, I am doing it this week at PriceKeel.

The executive-support half of the role is familiar ground too. At Applied Materials I build the leadership decks and run the OKR cadence, weekly and quarterly business reviews, for a cross-functional group that spans Sales, Engineering and Accounts. At Sensata I turned a margin mandate nobody had a tool to answer into the Bleeders and Leakers program: 1,200 pricing opportunities ranked against a $627M target, $433M in gaps surfaced for leadership to prioritize, and $700K+ actually recovered within two quarters. Preparing the brief is one skill. Making sure leadership acts on it is the other, and that is the one I have the track record for.

I also ran an 8-person team at Pixis managing direct-to-consumer clients on $15K to $90K monthly media budgets, so the DTC side of your business is not a foreign dialect to me either. Between building a company from zero and carrying P&L and revenue targets inside three larger ones, I have had to find operational bottlenecks fast and fix the process before it became a repeated problem, not after.

I would welcome fifteen minutes to talk through where ResultFlow's priorities are getting stuck right now and how a Chief of Staff could clear that in the first month. More of the detail behind these numbers is at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/resultflow.
