Hiring Team, Life Insurance Client (via Michael Page)

Your posting wants someone in the CEO's office who can turn market research into a strategic plan, then put it in front of leadership as a report they can act on. I built exactly that pipeline at Sensata: a Power BI dashboard ranking 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions, 4 product families and 20 product lines, which surfaced $433M in margin risk and, once I ran the negotiations it pointed to, closed $700K+ of that in 2 quarters.

I now run the CEO's office of my own company, PriceKeel, a decision-integrity layer for B2B SaaS deal pricing that I sell directly into Finance and RevOps leadership. There is no team to hand a problem to: I own the CRM and CPQ, sit in the forecast and pipeline reviews, sign off on deal approvals, and I am the one raising the first round. That is the same scope your posting describes as exposure to senior leadership and ownership of high-priority projects, just run from the founder's seat instead of alongside one.

The structured side of that work shows up earlier too. I led a 5-consultant team at Simon Vision Consulting, sizing a market from 170 facilities down to a SAM of 28 across four verticals, then presented the market-entry recommendation directly to Safran's leadership. Strategy work and risk reduction, the two things your posting leans on hardest, both come down to the same habit for me: take a cross-functional question nobody owns yet, build the model, and carry it to a decision rather than a slide.

At Applied Materials now, I coordinate across Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn scattered field input into one strategic view while carrying P&L and revenue targets, tracking the industry's demand shifts the way your posting asks the CEO's office to track the market. I automate the repetitive half of that work with AI agents built on Claude, which is what lets the role stay focused on the strategic plan instead of the spreadsheet behind it. I would like to bring that pattern, direct ownership, tracked metrics, a decision at the end, to the CEO's office you are building out.
