Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 14, 2026

Hiring Team, Refold AI

Your posting says the job is done right when the AE opens the laptop and everything they need already exists. At Sensata that was literally my job: I built the battle cards, decks and objection-handling material that 50+ reps used against competing suppliers, and win rates rose 30% on the accounts they touched. That is the muscle I would point at MuleSoft, Boomi, Workato and SnapLogic on day one.

The technical-product fluency you are asking for, holding a real conversation with an engineer instead of reaching for a metaphor, is already how I work. I owned GTM end to end for Sensata's sensing products (positioning, pricing, channel, launch) across a genuinely technical, multi-stakeholder buying committee, and drove $2M+ in first-year revenue. The positioning and messaging work that turned sensor specs into customer value lifted conversion 15% on our priority launches, and the competitive benchmarking I ran across 10+ rivals at Sensata moved price and market share by 12% and 8%. That is the same instinct a live fact base and a Market Guide submission need: find out what is actually true about the competitive set and get it into the hands of the people in deals.

Refold's two-persona problem, selling Day-0 connector velocity to product teams and Day-1 throughput to delivery leaders out of one platform, is close to what I did running an 8-person team across 8 enterprise clients at Pixis: different buyers, one product, and the enterprise case studies had to work for both rooms. I also build with the same AI tooling you are asking candidates to be comfortable with. At Applied Materials I run Claude agents to automate the market-sizing and forecasting work behind our positioning, and SwipeHire, an AI job-matching product I built zero-to-one, started with its own competitor teardowns and a category story from a blank page.

I would like to put that narrative, battle-card and competitive-intelligence work behind a category that does not have a name yet. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/refold-ai.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar