Hiring Team, Hevo Data

Your posting describes this seat as owning the company's operational rhythm and acting as a thought partner to the CEO, not filing reports up a chain. I built that exact rhythm from a blank page: PriceKeel is the B2B SaaS company I founded, and I set up its CRM, forecast and pipeline reviews, and deal approvals myself, then designed the guardrail engine and audit trail that Finance and Sales leadership now use to approve deals. Nobody handed me that structure. I built it from a first-principles read of how pricing decisions actually get made, then ran pilots with early customers and started raising the first round on the strength of it.

I run the same motion inside much larger organizations too, which is the part of this role that looks less like a founder story and more like a stakeholder-management job. At Applied Materials I act as the cross-functional thought partner between Sales, Engineering and Accounts, turning scattered field input into one market-sizing view, and I run the OKR cadence behind weekly and quarterly business reviews while carrying P&L targets for the role. At Sensata I partnered directly with senior executives on AP26 revenue models and site-transition strategy for a multi-$100M business unit, then owned the Bleeders and Leakers program end to end and recovered $700K plus in margin in two quarters. That is the pattern this role is asking for: take a cross-functional problem nobody owns yet, build the review structure around it, and carry it to a number.

The people-leadership side is not new ground either. I have hired and managed four teams, from an 8-person account team at Pixis to the team behind my own SwipeHire product, and I have sat in front of a leadership team before: I led a 5-consultant engagement for Safran that sized a market down to a SAM of 28 facilities, then presented the pricing and market-entry recommendation directly to their leadership. High agency and independent thinking are what got PriceKeel off the ground in the first place, and they are what I would bring to Hevo's Founder's Office.
