Hiring Team, Flam

The first thing I did when I read this posting was map it against a GTM launch I already own: at Sensata I ran go-to-market for a new sensing product line across North America and Europe, positioning, pricing, channel and launch, and it closed the first year at $2M-plus in revenue. That is the shape of work a Founder's Office generalist does for a growing company, and it is the work I am already doing, not a stretch I am proposing.

Right now I run that same motion for a company I started myself. PriceKeel is a B2B SaaS pricing tool I built from a blank page: I did the market research on where discount decisions break down, segmented the buyers into RevOps, Sales leadership and Finance, and built the product, CRM and pipeline process around what each of those three actually needed to see. I am running pilots and raising the company's first round on the back of that segmentation work, which is the same customer-research muscle your posting is asking for, just applied to my own company instead of someone else's.

The cross-functional part of this role, sales, marketing, product and operations all touching one initiative, is where I have spent most of five years. At Applied Materials I partner with Sales, Engineering and Accounts to turn field input into one market view leadership can act on. At Pixis I hired and managed an 8-person team running 8 client accounts and cut churn 50% by rebuilding segmentation and account strategy. Neither of those was a single-function job; both required getting people in other departments to act on research I had done, which is the actual test of a Founder's Office seat.

One more practical point: I am based in the San Francisco Bay Area, so US hours are simply my normal working day, not a schedule change. Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/flam.
