Hiring Team, Whatnot

Your Category Marketing Manager posting comes down to one loop: get buyers into a category, run the campaign or event that proves it out, then measure it and do the next one faster. I ran that loop at Sensata, where I owned the GTM for a new sensing product line end to end, positioning, pricing, channel and launch, and the email and paid campaigns behind it lifted qualified leads 35% and drove $2M+ in first-year revenue in year one.

Buyer acquisition is where I have spent most of my career living in the numbers, not just planning around them. At Plug Power I owned $100K/month acquisition budgets across paid search and paid social, cutting CPA 25% through bid work and A/B testing. At Pixis I ran retail media campaigns on Amazon Ads and Criteo across an 8-client D2C portfolio, $15K-$90K per client per month, and cut churn 50% by building category-specific playbooks instead of one generic plan. That is the same instinct a live-shopping category needs: different sellers, different buyers, one campaign engine that flexes.

The measure-and-iterate half of the role is where I built KPI frameworks in SQL and GA4 across 50K+ connected devices at Sensata to catch adoption signals early, and I still run that discipline today. At Applied Materials I automate the repetitive side of market and pricing analysis with AI agents built on Claude, which buys back hours for the campaign and partner work that actually needs a person paying attention.

What I would bring to Whatnot is a buyer-acquisition motion that has already shipped a launch to a real revenue number, plus the retail-media and partner-content reps to keep it moving fast across categories. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/whatnot.
