Hiring Team, Poshmark

Your posting says the PM on this role owns the infrastructure and the outcomes, not just the roadmap. That is the job I already have. At Plug Power I ran the marketing technology stack end to end: I automated Salesforce, Adobe Analytics, GA and Google Tag Manager into one closed-loop reporting system, then rebuilt the WordPress-to-Pardot lead flow so it triggered outreach without an engineer in the loop, cutting cost per lead 50%. That is the same problem your CRM-for-merchandising workflows are solving: give a non-engineering team a durable platform capability instead of a one-off request to a developer.

The data side of the role is familiar too. At Sensata I built SQL and GA4 KPI frameworks across 50K+ connected industrial devices to define the behavioral signals worth acting on, then owned the product roadmap and a 100+-feature backlog against that data, running Agile with engineering across three regions to cut time-to-market 20%. Reading your CDP section, the work is the same shape: a data model for customer attributes and events, a roadmap for who consumes it downstream, and a product person who can sit in the schema with the data engineers instead of waiting for a slide.

Your comfort with AI-assisted build tools is not a nice-to-have for me, it is already how I work. At Applied Materials I run AI agents built on Claude to automate the market and competitive analysis I used to do by hand, and I built an AI job-matching platform, SwipeHire, zero to one with the OpenAI API, running structured A/B experiments on its own activation funnel. A lean growth pod that expects its PM to prototype rather than spec-and-wait is the environment I already default to.

Poshmark's fashion marketplace is also not a cold domain for me. At Pixis I ran an 8-client portfolio that included a fashion brand, rebuilding its funnel end to end for 3x ROAS in a month, and cutting churn 50% across the book through segmentation and retention playbooks, the same instinct your seller re-engagement work is asking for.
