Hiring Team, Lumana

Your posting for the Revenue Operations Manager asks for someone who can own forecasting, pipeline health and funnel conversion analysis across Sales, Marketing and Customer Success, not just report on them after the fact. That is close to what the FY2026 Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata required: I built a Power BI system that scored 1,200 opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions, 4 product families and 20 product lines, with one win-rate and stage-distribution view that Sales and Finance both signed off on instead of a pile of spreadsheets nobody trusted.

That dashboard only mattered because of what happened after it. I ran deal-by-deal quote review and contract-accuracy checks inside the same program, recovering $700K+ in margin in two quarters and raising distributor and channel-partner margins from 53% to 61%. That is the deal desk work your posting calls quote management and approvals, done against real customer negotiations and multimillion-dollar quotes rather than a process diagram.

I run the same discipline today at PriceKeel, an early-stage SaaS startup where I set up and operate the company's own CRM and CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, and deal approvals, and built the audit trail and documentation Finance can point to for every discount call. That is the playbook and process-documentation habit a scaling go-to-market org needs to stay consistent as headcount and deal volume grow, coming from someone who has to live inside the system rather than hand it off after launch. At Applied Materials I build forecasting and market-sizing models across multiple product groups and keep automating the recurring parts of that work with Claude AI agents.

Lumana is running its go-to-market engine across Sales, Marketing and Customer Success at the pace a fast-growing startup moves, and that is exactly where forecasting and funnel definitions start to drift if nobody owns them end to end. I would bring the pattern that held at Sensata and holds today at PriceKeel: build the dashboard that shows where pipeline health or deal accuracy is unclear, then fix the process so Sales, Finance and Product can all point to the same number.
