

PITCH DECK | CONFIDENTIAL FINTECH LENDING PLATFORM FOUNDERS' OFFICE

You need someone who can own a cross-functional metric end to end, on day one, without being handed formal authority over the teams that touch it. I already run my own company that way.

Founder-grade ownership plus the operating cadence and cross-functional pull a Founders' Office runs on, from someone who has done both.

PriceKeel - founder and CEO, running product, CRM/CPQ, deal approvals and fundraising end to end

$700K+ margin recovered in 2 quarters, Sensata Bleeders and Leakers program

1,200 pricing opportunities ranked against a $627M target across 3 regions

Zero formal authority - every cross-functional win above was earned, not assigned

US and India operating experience

A Founders' Office role is not a staff job. It is a bet that one person can turn a fuzzy, high-stakes problem into an owned outcome.

What that bet actually requires

No fixed job description: the mandate shifts to whatever the CEO's highest-priority problem is this quarter, which means the person has to build credibility with Sales, Credit, Operations and Finance fast, with no org-chart authority over any of them.

The scoring criteria is not "did you analyze it well." It is "did the metric move," which means owning a plan through execution and reporting, not handing a deck back up the chain.

As the company moves toward a public listing, the same person is expected to help institutionalize the reporting rigor and operating cadence that a growing, IPO-track business needs to run on.

What I have already run, at founder scale

I run PriceKeel myself: product, CRM/CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, deal approvals, and the investor-facing narrative for the round I am currently raising. Nobody assigned me that scope.

At Sensata, I ran the Bleeders and Leakers program end to end: found $433M in margin gaps, then closed $700K+ of it in 2 quarters through negotiations with Sales and Finance I had no authority to compel.

At Applied Materials, I partner with Sales, Engineering and Accounts on the semiconductor market view, again without formal authority, while carrying P&L and revenue targets for the role.

The through-line across every role on my resume is the same one this posting is describing: take a cross-functional, ambiguous problem, build the plan, run it, and report the outcome, without waiting for someone to grant the authority first.

What the Founders' Office opening asks for, and where the proof sits.

What the role covers

"Drive cross-functional projects... often without formal authority, building alignment and driving execution across teams."

"Own specific business metrics and problem statements end to end: diagnose issues, build the plan, execute, and report on outcomes."

"Support IPO-readiness workstreams: governance, reporting rigor, process institutionalization, and investor-facing narrative."

My proof

PriceKeel, founder and CEO: the clearest possible version of "own it end to end." I built the product, run the operating rhythm, and am building the investor-facing narrative for the current raise myself.

Bleeders and Leakers at Sensata: diagnosed a $433M margin gap, built the negotiation case with Sales and Finance, executed it, and reported $700K+ closed in 2 quarters back to leadership.

AP26 revenue models and site transition strategy: built alongside senior executives, plus the leadership decks and OKR cadence (weekly and quarterly business reviews) that kept that work auditable.

Applied Materials today: cross-functional sizing work with Sales, Engineering and Accounts, and AI agents built on Claude automating the recurring reporting so time goes to the actual decision.

Bleeders and Leakers: diagnose the gap, close it, report the outcome.

Built as a BU-wide Power BI system covering 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions, 4 product families and 20 product lines, with pipeline funnel, win rate and stage distribution by salesperson and product line, run while carrying P&L and revenue targets for the Industrial BU.

Promoted from Product and Growth Marketing to Pricing Lead in 10 months on the strength of that program. The common thread across it: every fix was cross-functional, every fix was reported back to leadership, and every fix was measured after it shipped, not just proposed.

What the first month inside a Founders' Office looks like.

WEEK 1

Map the problem, not the org chart

Sit with the founders and the functions closest to the current priority problem (product, credit, sales, operations, finance) to hear where the metric is stuck and who already has partial context on why.

Why first: the same move that started the Bleeders and Leakers program. The gap is usually visible in the data and in people's frustration before anyone has framed it as one problem.

WEEK 2-3

Build the plan, then earn the alignment

Turn the problem into a structured plan with a number attached, pressure-test it with the functions that have to execute it, and start moving the metric before asking for a formal mandate to own it.

Why now: authority followed results at Sensata and follows results at PriceKeel. Alignment earned through a credible plan moves faster than alignment requested through a title.

WEEK 4

Institutionalize the cadence

Turn the one-off fix into a repeatable operating rhythm: an OKR or business-review cadence, a reporting format, and a clear owner, so the next priority problem has a process to plug into instead of starting cold.

Why this fast: reporting rigor that only exists in one person's head does not scale toward a public listing. Repeatability is the actual ask behind "process institutionalization."

CLOSE

You are hiring someone to turn ambiguous, high-stakes problems into owned outcomes. I already run a company that way, and I have done it inside two much larger ones.

The core proof is Sensata and PriceKeel together: $700K+ in margin recovered in 2 quarters through cross-functional negotiations I had no formal authority to compel, and a company I am building end to end right now, from product to CRM/CPQ to the investor narrative for its first round of equity.

What is harder to find is someone who has done that P&L-carrying, cross-functional-execution work inside a large organization and is doing the founder-level version of it at the same time. That combination is exactly what a Founders' Office with an explicit path to P&L ownership is built to develop, and I am already most of the way there.
