Hiring Team, Confidential Fintech Lending Platform

I run PriceKeel myself, end to end: I built the product, I run the CRM and CPQ, I sit in the forecast and pipeline reviews, I sign off on deal approvals, and I am the one raising the first round of equity. Nobody handed me that scope; I own it because there was no one else to own it. That is the exact shape of what your Founders' Office posting is asking for: not analysis handed up the chain, but outcomes owned end to end, with the explicit expectation of growing into a full P&L role. I have already been doing the P&L-owner version of that job, just at founder scale instead of category-leader scale.

Before PriceKeel, I ran the Bleeders and Leakers program at Sensata: built a Power BI system that ranked 1,200 pricing opportunities against a $627M target across 3 regions, 4 product families and 20 product lines, then closed $700K+ of that gap in 2 quarters through negotiations with Sales and Finance that I did not have formal authority to compel. I also partnered with senior executives on AP26 revenue models and site transition strategy for the Industrial BU, and built the leadership decks and OKR cadence (weekly and quarterly business reviews) that kept that work visible to leadership. That is the operating rigor a Founders' Office is asked to build and institutionalize as a company scales toward a public listing: reporting that holds up under scrutiny, not just after a good quarter.

At Applied Materials now, I partner directly with Sales, Engineering and Accounts to size the semiconductor market, again with no formal authority over any of those teams, while carrying P&L and revenue targets for the role. I automate the recurring parts of that analysis with AI agents built on Claude, which is less about the tool and more about not burning analyst hours on the same pivot table every cycle when the actual job is the judgment call at the end of it. A high-leverage team working directly with the CEO on the company's highest-priority problems needs someone who is comfortable turning an ambiguous, cross-functional problem into a structured plan without waiting to be told how. That is the pattern across every role on my resume, not just the current one.

What I bring beyond the resume is that I am building PriceKeel while doing all of the above, which means I spend my other hours thinking about exactly the kind of discount-governance and deal-economics logic that a lending platform on a path toward a public listing eventually has to run at scale internally. I would like to bring both sides of that to this role: the operator who has already run point on a cross-functional metric end to end, and the founder who is building the tool for the next version of that problem.
