Hiring Team, Airwallex

At Plug Power, cutting paid search CPA 25% did not come from raising bids across the board. It came from keyword-level research and bid strategy testing, matched against ad copy variants, so the $100K/month I owned across Google Ads and Microsoft Ads went to the terms actually converting instead of the ones just generating clicks. Wasted spend dropped 15% in the same pass. Your posting describes a comprehensive global SEM strategy, not a channel to babysit, and that keyword-first discipline is exactly how I would approach it.

"Across multiple markets" is not new to me either. At Pixis I ran paid search and PPC for 8 client accounts, several of them in non-English markets, managing an 8-person team against per-client budgets of $15K-$90K/month while carrying P&L targets. Localizing a campaign there was never just translation; it meant rebuilding the keyword set and bid strategy for how people in that market actually search, then proving it with a full-funnel restructure (feed cleanup, smart bidding, creative refresh) that delivered 3x ROAS in a single month for one account. I used Amplitude and Tableau to turn that campaign data into the kind of trend and optimization insight your posting asks for, not a vanity dashboard.

The cross-functional half of this role is familiar too. At Sensata I ran paid and email launch campaigns for new sensing products across North America and Europe, working with product marketing to align messaging so those campaigns drove +35% qualified leads and $2M+ in first-year revenue, and later carried P&L and revenue targets as Pricing Lead, reporting competitive insights and results to senior leadership every quarter. Airwallex's SEM program spans regions and reports up; I already run in that shape.

What I would bring to the Manager, Paid Search seat is someone who has already owned SEM budgets at six figures a month, tested bidding and ad copy to a measurable CPA result, and localized campaigns for markets outside English without losing the thread back to ROI.
