Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

October 25, 2026

Hiring Team, Effora

Effora's growth seat is built 80% execution and 20% planning, and that split is where I have actually lived at every stop since Pixis, not something I am pitching for the first time. I ran retail media (Amazon Ads, Criteo) for 8 D2C client accounts there, the same Amazon-and-marketplace mix Effora runs across Amazon, Flipkart and Nykaa, and cut client churn 50% by building playbooks the accounts could run without me in the room. At GenY Medium I rebuilt the Google Merchant Center and Meta catalog feeds behind a D2C brand's own site and marketplace listings, pulling 16x ROAS out of a feed fix most teams would have missed. Devices, topicals and supplements sell differently online than offline, but the marketplace mechanics underneath them are the ones I have already run.

The rest of this seat is whatever the founder hands you next, branding, ops, sales, content, and I already run that scope two ways. PriceKeel is the company I founded: I set up the CRM and deal approvals from zero, sell into RevOps and Finance, and I am the one running pilots and raising the first round, so a build-it-yourself scope is not new ground. Inside Applied Materials I turn ambiguous input from Sales, Engineering and Accounts into one market view, and I run daily workflows through Claude agents, the heavy AI-tool use this seat expects rather than something I would pick up on the job.

I have hired and managed teams end to end, from the 8-person account team at Pixis to the team behind my own SwipeHire product, and I build the sales decks, case studies and launch content that go with that work. That is the writing-plus-execution mix a founder's office running close to the ground needs, not a strategy memo.

Proof trail at adhi-growth-ai.vercel.app/ref/effora.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar