Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

November 12, 2026

Hiring Team, Karya

Your posting is not looking for a manager, it is looking for someone who has already built something out of nothing and knows exactly what that costs. I am doing it right now. I founded PriceKeel, a decision-integrity layer for B2B SaaS deal pricing, with no playbook to copy: I built the guardrail engine, the CRM and CPQ, the deal-approval process, and I am running pilots and raising our first round while doing it. That is the "foundational grit" your req asks for, happening today, not a credential from a past chapter.

The revenue-pipeline half of the role, identifying early adopters, securing design partners, and signing the first real contracts, is the same motion I ran at Sensata. A vague margin mandate with no existing tool to answer it became the Bleeders and Leakers program: 1,200 opportunities ranked against a $627M target, then closed into $700K+ recovered in two quarters by negotiating on competitive gaps and willingness to pay. That is the difference between a hypothesis and a signed deal, and I have run that loop before.

On the builder side, SwipeHire was my own zero-to-one product: I wrote the PRD, scoped the MVP, ran user interviews in the field, and onboarded the first 50 users before I touched a pricing model, then validated three subscription tiers against what people would actually pay. Five years in, the pattern across every seat is the same one your req is testing for: turn an ambiguous, cross-functional problem into a number a business can act on, then close it.

I built a short pitch deck that maps the Karya X mandate directly to the three loops above: the founder build, the revenue pipeline, and the field-tested product discovery. I would welcome fifteen minutes to walk through it and to hear which problem statement you are most trying to crack first. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/karya.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar