Hiring Team, Attio

At Sensata I owned a sensing-product launch end to end, from positioning and the GTM plan down to the battlecards a rep could use cold, and that single motion drove $2M+ in first-year revenue plus a 30% win-rate lift once the field had case studies and objection handling to back it. That is the shape of this role: own the story from strategy through the collateral that closes a deal, not just the strategy memo.

The writing is where I spend the most time, not the slide. The positioning framework I wrote for Sensata's sensing line had to work for an engineer and a procurement buyer in the same sentence, and it only earned the 15% conversion lift on priority launches because I rewrote it against 30+ customer interviews until the language matched how OEM and distributor buyers actually described the problem. Competitive intelligence across EMEA and the US fed the same loop: purchasing patterns and win/loss signal, not a battlecard nobody opens twice.

I like that Attio's PMM seat sits that close to EPD. At Sensata that cross-functional pull was never a formal reporting line, it was earning it launch by launch: product handed me a capability, I turned it into a reason a buyer switches, and the roadmap calls that came back out of those 30+ interviews went straight into what got built next. Running that loop inside a CRM built for agentic revenue, for a market that is actively rewriting what a CRM is supposed to do, is the kind of problem I want on my desk.

I'd welcome a conversation about how the Sensata launch motion maps onto Attio's next release. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/attio.
