Hiring Team, Meolaa

Your posting asks for someone who can take a whitespace opportunity from a hunch to a framework without waiting for someone to hand them a lane. At Sensata I did exactly that with the Bleeders and Leakers program: a vague margin mandate that I turned into a $433M shortlist of 1,200 opportunities across 3 regions and 20 product lines, then negotiated into $700K+ recovered in two quarters. Nobody had built the dashboard, the shortlist or the negotiation path before I did; I built all three myself.

The rest of the role, carrying a cross-functional project from problem definition to execution, removing blockers and closing open loops across teams, is the same muscle I use at PriceKeel, the B2B SaaS deal pricing company I founded and run. I built its CRM, CPQ and deal-approval process from zero and negotiate directly with vendors and early partners, while preparing the investor updates and board materials our first raise depends on. On the D2C side, I ran the same motion at Pixis: hired and managed an 8-person team across 8 e-commerce client accounts, cutting churn 50% by diagnosing where a client's whitespace sat before anyone else did.

Preparing materials for business reviews is a weekly habit for me, not a special project. I run the OKR cadence and leadership decks at Applied Materials, turning Sales, Engineering and Accounts input into one market-sizing recommendation, and do the same for PriceKeel's own board. GenY Medium, where I was the liaison across regional, localization and analytics teams for D2C e-commerce brands, taught me the thing a Founder's Office needs most: someone has to carry context across functions so nothing gets dropped between them.

I would want fifteen minutes to walk through how I would spend my first month inside Meolaa, built around the same shape as the Bleeders and Leakers program: find the real blocker, ship one decision-ready recommendation, then turn it into a cadence.
