Hiring Team, Sprout Social

Your posting wants someone who turns competitor tracking into materials a rep actually uses mid-deal, and that is the exact loop I ran at Sensata. I benchmarked 10+ named competitors to rebuild our pricing strategy, which moved revenue 12% and market share 8% in a single fiscal year. The intelligence only counted once it changed a number someone signed off on, and that is the standard I hold competitive work to.

The deal-support half of your posting is where I spent even more time. I wrote the enablement decks and case studies 50+ reps carried into competitive conversations, and win rates moved 30% off the back of them. I know what makes a rep open a deck mid-call instead of ignoring it: a slide that answers the one objection they are staring at right then, not a full competitor teardown nobody reads before the call.

Executive-ready structure is the same muscle behind an analyst evaluation, and it is one I have built repeatedly. I led a 5-consultant team analyzing 150+ target facilities and 10+ competitors for Safran, then presented the market-entry case straight to their leadership. Building the number, defending it under a question you did not plan for, and turning it into a decision is the same job whether the audience sits at Safran or at an industry analyst desk.

Sprout's push toward AI-powered social intelligence is a workflow I already run daily: I automate recurring competitive and pricing research with Claude-built agents at Applied Materials, the same build-the-tool habit behind shipping an AI product, SwipeHire, on my own.
