Hiring Team, Open Secret

Last year I led a five-consultant team through a market-sizing problem for Safran: we took 170 facilities down to a serviceable 28, built personas across four verticals, and presented the pricing and market-entry recommendation straight to Safran's leadership. That is the consulting half your posting asks for, and it is the same motion your CEO's Office needs whenever a cross-functional question comes down and the answer has to be a number, not a status update.

The operator half I run today. I founded PriceKeel, a pricing tool for B2B SaaS deal desks, and I own its CRM, CPQ, forecast and pipeline reviews, and deal approvals myself, with an audit trail Finance can check against the underlying deal data. That is the ad-hoc problem-solving and process ownership your posting describes: one person picking up whatever the business needs that week and building the system under it, not just writing the recommendation and handing it off.

Before PriceKeel I carried P&L and revenue targets at Sensata and Applied Materials, where the job was turning Sales, Engineering and Accounts input into one market view, then building the leadership decks and OKR reviews that tracked those initiatives for stakeholders every week. At Sensata that discipline recovered $700K+ in margin in two quarters; it is the same research-into-decision work your posting wants pointed at Procurement, Demand Planning, Supply Chain, Category Management and Sales.

What stays constant from one company to the next is the operating model: get close to the data, build the dashboard, and hand the CEO's office a clean decision instead of a pile of inputs. That is what I would bring to Open Secret's Founder's Office. I would welcome fifteen minutes to talk about the role. Proof trail at adhithyabhaskar.vercel.app/ref/open-secret.
