

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar

San Francisco Bay Area, CA | arokhith@gmail.com | +1-929-563-9974

September 28, 2026

Hiring Team, Replit

Replit's pitch is that agentic software creation should be a normal way to build things, and I already run a version of that loop from the other side of the desk. At Applied Materials, I automate the market-sizing and competitive analysis behind every pricing call with AI agents built on Claude, the same agentic habit that turns a blank prompt into finished work, so the team spends its hours on the judgment calls an agent cannot make. That is the instinct I would bring to positioning Design and Slides: let the product's own agentic workflow do the explaining, and spend the marketing hours on the narrative and channels around it.

Positioning and launches are where I have spent the last two years living day to day. At Sensata, I owned the go-to-market for a new sensing product line end to end, positioning, channel and launch, and built the audience-focused narratives that turned technical capabilities into customer value, lifting launch conversion 15% and driving $2M+ in first-year revenue. I tracked competitors and customer needs across two regions on a standing cadence and fed that intelligence straight back to Product, the same loop Design and Slides needs to keep two products' positioning honest against a market that moves fast.

I also know the other side of that loop, building the product itself. I built and shipped SwipeHire zero-to-one, alone: wrote the PRD, scoped the MVP, then owned positioning, ICP and channel strategy myself, running competitor teardowns and 8+ A/B tests that lifted activation 25% for a consumer, product-led audience. A product-led, creative tool lives or dies on that same discipline, matching the narrative to the person actually using it, not just the buyer signing off on it.

I would like to bring that same loop, positioning grounded in real usage, launches that carry it, and a channel strategy that keeps adoption compounding, to Design and Slides. Proof trail at adhi-product-ai.vercel.app/ref/replit.

Adhithya Rokhith Bhaskar